Connect with each other,
Connect to the future.

Dear AJS members,

I hope you and your loved ones are safe and healthy in these unstable times. The world is facing the unprecedented crisis. For the AJS, biggest challenges are yet to come. We are concerned if we can continue to rely on corporate and individual members' support, and we have been doing for many years. We would like to thank you and ask your continued support and cooperation. In order to communicate with members, we are publishing this newsletter along with the online programs and hope to connect with you through them.

The U.S. is going through a difficult time right now, but I am sure it will pull through with its own strength. They will have a presidential election coming up this fall. We can't take our eyes off of it. I look forward to the day when I can see you all again, to help contain the outbreak in other parts of the world. There were also supplies sent from China that were considered inappropriate. Due to this, China has been facing global backlash and anti-China sentiments are on the rise in some parts of Europe. The UK is even about to review the policy for its 5G network reliant on the Chinese company Huawei. Much of China's efforts to gain global power have not succeeded because they seem to not fully understand Joseph Nye's advice: "the best propaganda is not propaganda." It seems to me that China has been destroying their chance of accelerating their dominance on the world stage by themselves.

Ichiro Fujisaki

Kubo: One of the reasons why America's prestige and global respect has declined is because they have failed to act as a good example for other countries. I believe America will face huge economic damage because of their belated response towards this crisis, which is an extremely serious situation since the Great Depression. Some people even predict that the unemployment rate may rise up to 20%. As fiscal deficit deepens not only in America but also in other developed countries, the whole world will face an economic crisis.

been inconsistent with his attitude towards China, but now government officials and the US government as a whole are starting to condemn various Chinese practices. Even Democratic politicians have hardened their attitude towards China. I think there will be a shift in attitude towards US-China relations as the US gradually changes to "a-whole-of-the-government pushback" approach to counter China.

Fujisaki: In 1989, around the time of the Tiananmen Square incident, Deng Xiaoping proposed a policy called "toukoku-yukai" (韬光養晦 (tao Guang Yang Hui)), which meant that China would stay quiet without creating enemies until they had gained power. However, President Xi Jinping clearly did not follow this policy as he made clear that the Chinese government is in favor of great power politics. I actually think this is a good thing because if he had abided by the rules of Deng Xiaoping's policy, the world would not have seen the emergence of power by showing a more consistent approach to counter China.

should they have towards America and China?

Kubo: Because Japan and America are alliances and have many shared values, I think that the US-Japan relationship should be placed as the cornerstone of Japan's foreign policy. Japan should not fight with China, but I also think that the Japanese government should voice an objection to the Chinese government on their attitude towards Hong Kong. I think that reconciling with China is important, but it is unlikely that it will ever return to the harmonious relationship we had during the 1980s. Issues like the territorial dispute over the Islands in the East China Sea and the restrictions of the Japanese still remain as obstacles to returning to the honeymoon period in the 1980s. It is important to note that even if a state visit by President Xi Jinping takes place, any attempts to seek bilateral relationships back on track will possibly be proven futile.

Motegi: The 2020 US presidential election has drawn global attention. While some say that Joe Biden is taking the lead due to Trump's failed response to the coronavirus, others say Trump has a better chance because of his increased exposure to the mass media. Please tell us your thoughts on the upcoming elections and on the candidates.

Fujisaki: While I was the Ambassador to the United States in 2008, the presidential elections between Obama and McCain took place. Journalists asked me which candidate Japan preferred, and I replied, "It's like a Christmas gift. You don't say anything till the day. And you open the box and cry out, 'Oh this is just what I wanted!'" I said this as a joke but there is some truth to this. Japan will have to maintain a friendly relationship with whoever is elected. I think the outcome will be reliant on many variables from the economy to the candidates' inappreciate remarks. I think the candidates have very different characteristics. One of Trump's strengths is that inappropriate remarks will not smear him anymore as everyone has got used to it, unlike Biden who has a nice character but is less resilient. The polls right now show Biden has a national lead over Trump, but I don't know for sure what will happen. It is interesting to keep paying attention to the difference of characters.

Kubo: Judging from the results of several polls, I think it is safe to say that Biden is leading over Trump right now. It's true that Trump has an advantage because of his increased exposure to the media, but he also has a tendency to spark controversy over his comments every time he speaks in public. His increased exposure could actually work in favor of Biden. However, we should take note that even amid rising death tolls from the coronavirus, Trump's approval rate remains steady at around 40% to 45%. I think that Trump wants to turn this election into a referendum on reopening the economy. Therefore, one main debate during this election will likely be over public health and economic recovery. The protests coming from business owners, libertarians, and religious conservatives have drawn comparison to the Tea Party movement. Trump may have been successful in the Biden administration. We should be cautious as they may try to reset the relationships with China and DPRK. Both of us should play as a team, in many ways. If Joe Biden is elected, how do you think this will affect the relationship has promoted Japanese interests in many ways. If Joe Biden is elected, how do you think this will affect the tance and value of the US-Japan alliance. However, he may be softer on China compared to the Trump administration, as the Democratic party tends to prioritize multilateral relationships and international cooperation. Therefore, China may not perceive the Biden administration as a threat. While we should expect the Biden administration to be more internationally cooperative, it may seek the autotelic diplomacy with China. This is my concern. I would expect Biden to be strict with China while taking international initiatives.

Fujisaki: I think that the government's actions will be easier to predict if Biden is elected. I also think that the US government will start to work as a team and extend the approach with global alliances. Relying upon a bit more mercenary motives, Biden will probably rejoin the Paris Agreement and Iran Nuclear Deal. Although we should welcome the Biden administration, we should be cautious as they may try to reset the relationships with China and DPRK. Both of us should play as a team, in many ways. If Joe Biden is elected, how do you think this will affect the

QUESTIONS FROM OBSERVERS

Question A: If Japan is to make a statement against the US-China relation regardless of the US presidential election result, where should we hold ground?
Kubo: If Trump is to be inaugurated as the next president, Japan should ensure that the United States launch prior consultation on revising its China policy. As for the Biden administration, it is imperative to advocate the need to alter US perception towards Japan and its allies. For instance, John Kerry, the US secretary of state delivered controversial rhetoric during his visit to Asia in 2014, in which he singled out climate change as the existential threat in Asia. Like so, we should pay attention to the fact that the Democratic administration may move in a bit detached from national security realities.

Fujisaki: I believe the Security Treaty will remain under the Biden administration; however, Japan should advise the U.S. to vigorously pursue negotiations of arms control treaties with China. Furthermore, it is vital to embrace international organizations namely the UN.

Question B: How would the ongoing racial discrimination movement have an influence on the presidential election?
Kubo: In the racially diversified US society, conflicts and confrontations have been inevitable and widely known. The current dispute has not occurred out of the blue. The social division can be clearly observed in the presidential election. The vast majority of African Americans vote for the Democrats, whilst more than half of the white counterparts cast their vote for the Republicans. In addition, 70% of the Hispanics also uphold the Democrat party. In this context, we should focus on who will be nominated as the vice president by Biden. Kamala Harris, an African American senator or Cortez Masto, a Hispanic senator are one of the strong candidates.

Fujisaki: Racial discrimination has been controversial in the United States for long, and they have been exerting strenuous effort to counter such sentiments by teaching that everyone is born equal. Nonetheless, some condemn affirmative actions as excessive. One example is the LGBT policy under the Obama administration. The second case in point is against immigrant inflows. There are many voices assailing illegal immigrants and DREAMers. Trump has been successfully exploiting the repugnance. Most Americans consider themselves as anti-racist if asked, however, many of them may be working hard to do so. It is impossible to have an insight into one's mind. Also, those who once voted for Trump may now have sympathy against him. Accordingly, the sentiments are enlarging in the United States.
Question C: What would attract the unaffiliated voters under current circumstances?
Kubo: The unaffiliated voters who prioritize the prevention of Covid-19 over the economic reform, are not expected to support the Trump administration. On the contrary, people who prefer reopening the economy would support the Republican Party. Moreover, wearing a mask or not has become an issue to show his/her political message, as President Trump demonstrates reluctance. Meanwhile, Biden is spotted with an ostentatious manner of wearing an oversized mask. Masks symbolize the nominees' political position on the COVID-19 outbreak. Likewise, it may be a point to carefully observe the outbreak in the US, by which the mindsets of nonpartisans will fluctuate.
Fujisaki: In the past, Obama and Gore only managed to win on approximately 500 counties out of 3,100, whilst former President Clinton won on 1,500. This means rural residents are inclined to vote for the Republicans. Obama was nevertheless elected on account of the growing urban population. I believe the votes in the suburban areas would be the predominant key to decide who wins the election.

Question D: Are the divisions in American society going to continue hereafter?
Kubo: We cannot deny that President Trump became prominent for his irrationally offensive remarks. For one thing, the conflict between WASPs and non-WASP is deeply rooted in identity, following with issues of immigration, I think it will continue to be coupled with problems. Secondly, the potential for political convergence is undeniable. Both parties share mutual values on economic policies. For instance, the Democrats and Republicans promote protectionism whilst the Democrats advocated equality. Even so, the Clinton administration introduced fiscal consolidation characterized by Republican ideologies and Trump has done pork-barrel spending. The two political parties incorporate one another's ideologies for their own benefits. However, I do not think the bilateral compromise would reconcile the existing differences. Although Americans have a tendency to unite in response to wars, the COVID-19 outbreak is nothing like a war. We need that the U.S. is a country of "a grand social experiment." It may not be easy for Americans to integrate, however, I believe their strength is that everyone shares the same fundamental beliefs such as the founding father's going through philosophy.
Question E: Would the US soften its China policy under the Biden administration?
Kubo: China must regard the current Trump administration as a country vigorously challenging China. It seems Trump's concern in relation to China is only limited to trade deficit, failing to possess any special worldview. Hence, I am afraid there seems no central axis of policy towards China, which may actually not exist. If Kurt Campbell joins the Biden administration with his tough approach, the policy may get strict against China. Meanwhile, if Biden prioritizes the defense spending cut, that will be a concern.

Fujisaki: It is noted that Japan was helped much by President Trump's personal relations with Prime Minister Abe. Under the Democratic party, the United States is expected to be more calculating. Yes, in the Obama administration, the United States took a tougher stance towards China under Kurt Campbell. We have to cooperate with the U.S. regardless of who will be the President.
Question F: How do you think the US will respond to Trump's countermeasures against Hong-Kong?
Kubo: The United States already enacted legislation against Hong-Kong, giving trade preferential treatment on condition of the One Country Two Systems. If the United States introduces countermeasures against the Hong-Kong uprising, US government officials may suspend the preferential treatment partially or even completely. This could impair American industries, nonetheless, Trump would presumably employ measures to a certain extent.
Fujisaki: I think the people who need the US to take a firm stand are the Chinese public, although they will never admit it. Hong-Kong is approaching a middle point of 50 years under the One Country Two Systems. This is the time the people of Hong-Kong are trying hard to maintain what they had been given, however, China would tighten its grips. Although Europe was once attracted to China's wealth, now they may be reconsidering. I think many countries tacitly America's role in objecting to China. It is worth the United States would continue its stance towards approaching the Hong-Kong issue.

Dr. Okio Hino
Professor of Juntendo University
"Cancer philosophy"

Dr. Hino gave brief but thorough explanations on cancer philosophy. One of the memorable quotes from his lecture was "Facing with cancer is similar with facing with the patient's characteristics."

Mr. Tim Griffin
Lieutenant Governor for the State of Arkansas
"Presidential election of 2020"

Mr. Griffin talked about the presidential election of 2020 and the U.S.-Japan relations from the viewpoint of Republicans. His analysis on the U.S. presidential election 2020 was very sharp and persuasive.

Ms. Junko Koshino, Designer
"America/World and Me"

The audiences were intrigued and inspired by Ms. Koshino, one of the world-leading fashion designers herself, and her talk, which was mainly on both her private experiences and career achievements.

Mr. Shingo Yamagami
Director-General/Assistant Minister of Economic Affairs Bureau, MOFA
"Recent US-Japan Relations"

Mr. Yamagami gave us a talk on recent hot issues: the recent US-Japan trade agreement, the U.S.-Japan digital trade agreement, the G20, RCEP negotiations, and WTO reforms.

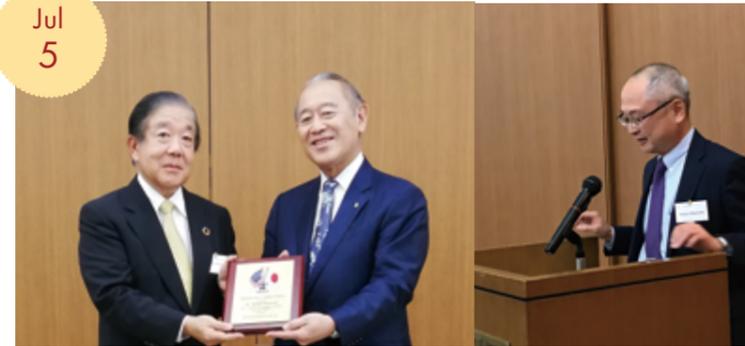

Feb

Xmas Party

AJS Xmas Party is one of the popular events for members. Last year's party was full of joy with a fun quiz and gift exchange to interact with each other. One of the AJS student interns and his guest showed us a beautiful performance of violin and piano.

FY2019 Regular/Special Program

We held various types of events for the wide age range of members.
* Some of the events are subject to age restrictions.
* Due to the impact of the COVID-19 outbreak this year, the event at the venue will be held in accordance with future conditions.

Yokota U.S. Air Base (YAB) & Ishikawa Brewery Tour

32 members gathered for the tour of the U.S. military base and the Ishikawa brewery, which is famous for its "Tama Jiman." There were no Ospreys parked at the base, but it was spectacular to see the inside of the base from the bus window.

AJS Centennial Programs

The centennial programs were established in 2017, the year of the 100th anniversary of AJS. There are four programs run with the AJS centennial fund by members and other organizations.

The 3rd Kentaro Kaneko Award was given to Ms. Rinsberg, who has hosted many Japanese homestay families over the past 35 years, Mr. Nagatani, who has contributed to U.S.-Japan relationship through C&W music, and the Special Award was given to Dr. Sen Genshitsu, Grand Master 15th Urasenke, who has made a significant contribution through tea ceremony.

1 The Kaneko Award

The Award is given to those who worked for long years to promote people-to-people exchanges between U.S. and Japan. Round-trip air tickets are given to them as a prize. (Sponsored by ANA)

Ms. Helen Rinsberg
(Recommended by Japan-America Society of Greater Cincinnati)

Mr. Charlie Nagatani
(Recommended by America-Japan Society of Kumamoto)

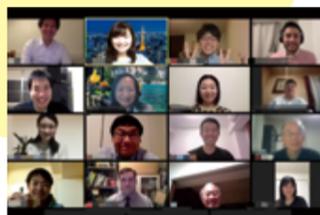

Dr. Genshitsu Sen
(Recommended by America-Japan Society of Kyoto)

2 Next Generation's Roundtable in Tokyo

Monthly meeting for under age of 40 Americans and Japanese to meet each other discussing issues of their interest in English. (Sponsored by Mori Building Co., Ltd.)

We began our third term in October 2019. This term, we have about 70 members, including Japanese and American working in a various industries and sectors. Nomi-kai, which is held irregularly after the meeting, is also a great opportunity to deepen their exchanges.

In April, the NGRT is held its first virtual meeting. We discovered the importance of using online to stay connected and keep the discussion going.

Visit & Study Japan Program

This program provides financial support to the U.S. graduate students who study about Japan or U.S.-Japan relations. (Sponsored by ANA, Collaboration with MOFA)

The five successful recipients presented their Japan-related research findings. They reaffirmed their understanding of Japanese culture and history.

Winner Interview

Shun Takano, a freshman at Keio University who won the America Bowl last year, has become a student intern. We interviewed him about his memories of the tournament and his ambitions for his college life.

<Excerpts from the interview>

The America Bowl is not just a quiz tournament that you can answer with knowledge, but you need English and critical skills to solve the questions. I was impressed by my team members who were able to get the answers to the questions that none of the other students could answer correctly. As a result of the win, I was able to go to the United States for the first time. I met many people who changed my views and values. From now on, as an AJS intern, I would like to be involved with management of the next American Bowl Tournament, using my experience. I also want to become a doctor in the future, so I will work on my studies hard.

Meet our new staff member!

In April, the AJS welcomed new staff member Ms. Maki Motegi who has just graduated from Tokyo Gakugei University in this spring. She had been an intern with the AJS since her freshman year of University and participated in many AJS programs. Meet Maki Motegi!

It's been 5 years since I joined the AJS as an intern. I am excited to begin officially working at the AJS as it combines many passions in my life. These include working with our great members, the use of technology and creativity, and the exploration and innovation of the new programs. Looking forward to seeing you in person!

Editor's note

As we cannot run regular meetings and events due to the COVID-19, we are publishing this special issue of the Newsletter to keep our members up to date on the activities of the AJS. We hope that this situation will be improved soon and that all the activities of the society will be restored. All of us are looking forward to seeing you again.
